New on Thinking Faith:

Who is going to pay for it all?

The summer economic plan announced this week by Chancellor Rishi Sunak extends the unprecedented spending that the UK government is undertaking to manage the fallout from the Covid-19 crisis. But where will the money come from to pay for it? Catholic Social Teaching's treatment of the principles of private property and the fulfilment of contracts shows that answering that question in a way that ensures the common good is served is a complicated matter, says Patrick Riordan SJ. Read about the impact on the British Province of the Battle of Britain, which began on 10 July 1940, in a reflection from the Jesuits in Britain's deputy archivist, Mary Allen. Read >>

Spotlight on scripture: the parable of the sower (Sunday 12 July)

Striving for perfection or growing into fruitfulness?

Images of natural growth in the Bible, one of which we hear in Sunday's gospel, opened for Christopher Chapman a new way of thinking about spirituality 'The sower and the seed, the mustard seed that despite its size grows into a home for the birds: all tell of the wonder of growth, but also of obstacles that lie in its way.' Matthew's Gospel

The explanation of the parable of the sower, which we hear on Sunday 12 July, warns of failure to understand, of faith that lacks roots, of the cares of the world and lure of wealth choking the gospel message. Read >>
